RELEVANCE OF THE COURSE

This introductory course lays the groundwork for the students and general public to look at the pervasiveness of gender-based inequalities that are prevalent in our day to day lives . The learners are introduced to all the important feminist movements and struggles popularly referred as the Second Wave of Feminism . While introducing the evolution of feminist pedagogy it cuts across the traditional disciplinary boundaries , voice, authority and positionality .

SCOPE OF THE COURSE

In the past few years graduates in Gender Studies have a better employability in Governmental and Non-Governmental Institutions. They are able to contribute effectively for the engendering process and to address the structural inequalities that impede the progress of Women, Gender and Sexual Minorities. The learners of this course will be able to identify the invisible layers of systemic violence perpetuated by patriarchal power structures. The course will synergize the students to defend the rights of the marginalized and facilitate a genuine dialogue for altruism and social liberation.

COURSE DETAILS

COURSE OBJECTIVES & OUTCOMES

1. Describe how the effects of gender and sexuality intersect in the construction of identity and institutional formations.
2. Understand and evaluate major theories and texts central to Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies.
3. Understand the ways in which economic, cultural, religious, environmental, and political forces shape a range of transnational social movements in Kerala, and in the national and international spectrum .
4. Conduct research using feminist methodologies.
5. Use feminist frameworks to analyze the structure of gendered representations in media, language, and texts

- CO 1: Perceive how concepts of gender and sexuality are created, maintained, and/or challenged through embodiment, cultural representations, and social organization.
- CO 2: Explain how theories of gender and sexuality have been influenced by and how they influence the social movements
